SEVEN KILLED, 100 INJURED BY EXPLOSION

California Powder Company's Judson Plant at Giant, Near Oakland, Cal., Blows Up and Sets the Town on Fire.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., Aug. 24.—Seven persons were killed and over one hundred were injured in an explosion and stampede at the Judson plant of the California Powder Company in Giant, a suburb of Oakland, this afternoon.

The other houses in the little town were set afire by the blazing fragments thrown out by the explosion, and the population of the town fighting the flames.

The cause of the explosion had not been ascertained when the first news of the explosion came to the city, as the wires were working poorly owing to the strike. Doctors and fire-fighting apparatus were sent to the scene, and a special train loaded with Oakland physicians and firemen was started for the scene.

From the little news received it was believed that the part of the town near the powder works would be a complete loss, though the frantic messages indicated that the whole town was doomed.

Full Force Was at Work.

The terrific explosion came at a time when the full force was at work. Several men are reported as known dead, while it is feared that other bodies may be found buried in the ruins. The tremendous detonation wrecked the building and scattered flames about, burning the injured and setting fire to adjacent buildings.

The employees and townspeople worked heroically to save their comrades and drag the injured out of the danger zone. The local doctors could not begin to meet the situation. The giant fire brigade was augmented by the townspeople, who fought desperately to stop the spread of the flames.

This is the sixth explosion. Giant is a station on the Southern Pacific Railroad a few miles north of Oakland and across the bay from San Francisco. The only buildings there are those of the powder plant and the homes of the employees of the factory, with a sprinkling of stores.

This was the sixth explosion within a period of ten years. The death list growing out of the blow-ups that have occurred at the California Powder Company's plant numbers hundreds. Most of the powder work is done by Chinese. Only there expert handling is required are able hands employed.

Years ago the insurance people refused to take any risks on the foundry and the damage was a clear loss.
